

Bless You All... I'll Just Stay Here Laughing

I tried to take spirituality seriously - it kept cracking jokes at me.

Nothing lowers your vibration faster than trying to keep it high.

I stopped chasing enlightenment and accidentally found contentment instead.

Serious seekers meditate toward silence; I giggle my way there sideways.

The universe whispers secrets, then laughs so we don't overthink them.

I don't ascend - I wander upward while laughing at the stairway signs.

Every spiritual breakthrough I've had began with a ridiculous thought.

Enlightenment doesn't want a fan club. It prefers a laugh track.

The more solemn the teaching, the faster I look for the punchline.

I align my chakras by refusing to scowl at existence.

Wisdom has many teachers - some charge admission, some teach through laughter.

Not everyone needs a spiritual stage - some of us awaken in the audience and stay.

Laughter spreads quicker where no spotlight is burning.

Reality has great special effects and terrible plot continuity.

Some teachers need pulpits - I need punchlines.

Bless you all... I'll just stay here laughing.
